Chip Sales Remain Stagnant

According to the SIA, it now expects chip sales to decline by 2.4% in 2016 compared with 2015. The trade group, which reports sales figures gathered by the World Semiconductor Trade Statistics (WSTS) organization, acknowledged that it is expected to be a down year for chips after the WSTS updated its forecast. All major market research firms that cover the semiconductor industry are also calling for an annual sales decline.

However, The WSTS forecast projects that chip sales will grow by 2% next year and by an additional 2.2% in 2018.
